

The Independent armies issued their own currency near the end of the War for Unification. Lacking a sound economic base, the scrip's value fluctuated wildly. As a result, the attached "perk" extra ration vouchers were often worth more than the currency itself.

Independents' Scrip, circa 2510

The Independent armies issued their own currency near the end of the War for Unification. Lacking a sound economic base, the scrip's value fluctuated wildly. As a result, the attached "perk" extra ration vouchers were often worth more than the currency itself.

Independents' Scrip, circa 2510

The Independent armies issued their own currency near the end of the War for Unification. Lacking a sound economic base, the scrip's value fluctuated wildly. As a result, the attached "perk" extra ration vouchers were often worth more than the currency itself.

Independents' Scrip, circa 2510

The Independent armies issued their own currency near the end of the War for Unification. Lacking a sound economic base, the scrip's value fluctuated wildly. As a result, the attached "perk" extra ration vouchers were often worth more than the currency itself.

